Minds Made For Stories How Minds Made for Stories is a needed corrective to the narrow and compartmentalized approaches often imposed on schools—approaches which are at odds with the way writing really works outside school walls. Amazon.com: Minds Made for Stories: How We Really Read and ... Minds Made for Stories is about how, despite the Common Core sway away from narrative writing, our minds are really made to understand and convey information through stories. I think this book made a lot of good points but also was a little repetitive and therefore somewhat boring. Minds Made for Stories: How We Really Read and Write ... men to patent their inventions. Stories about Great Thinkers and Inventors Minds Made for Stories. “It is conventional to view narrative as a mode, a type of writing, often an easy one. We are told that on the job and in college, we do the hard stuff, we analyze and make logical arguments. We don’t tell stories. But we do. We can’t get away from it.”. —Tom Newkirk. Read Chapter One, “Sustained Reading,” where Tom describes the conflict between the way we treat narrative in school and the central role narrative plays in our consciousness.
