"Dr. Crowder's Philosophy, Who Needs It? is an eminently practical work. Someone of moderate intelligence, who has never taken a class in philosophy or read a book about the subject, could teach this book's contents to a Sunday School class or youth group without becoming confused himself or confusing anyone who is paying attention.

This collection of essays was the last work planned by Ayn Rand before her death in 1982. In it, she summarizes her view of philosophy and deals with a broad spectrum of topics. According to Ayn Rand, the choice we make is not whether to have a philosophy, but which one to have: rational, conscious, and therefore practical; or contradictory, unidentified, and ultimately lethal.

Instead, she argues, whether we realize it or not, we all hold and act on philosophic ideas — and philosophy is a crucial, practical need of human life. This lesson, based on Rand's talk, is a great starting point for those new to philosophy or to Rand's ideas. The talk became the lead essay in Rand's book Philosophy: Who Needs It.

“Philosophy is a necessity for a rational being: philosophy is the foundation of science, the organizer of man’s mind, the integrator of his knowledge, the programmer of his subconscious, the selector of his values.” I would add to this eloquent summary of Rand’s, that we need philosophy to help us see the Matrix, and therefore to leave it.

—Ayn Rand Lexicon

The root of a philosophy and whether it is life-affirming or life-negating, Rand maintains in Philosophy: Who Needs It, is its position on the primacy of existence vs. the primacy of consciousness. “The primacy of existence (of reality) is the axiom that existence exists, i.e., that the universe exists independent of consciousness (of any consciousness), that things are what they are, that they possess a specific nature, an identity.
