The Psychology of Personal Constructs. Personal Construct Psychology is a "new" (in fact more than sixty years old!) approach to psychology which tentatively has been characterised as "person-centred", "cognitive" or "humanistic". That means that the focus is on the "personal" ways that individuals use to "construe" (understand, interpret, and even actively design) their world. The Psychology of Personal Constructs - Society Personal Construct Psychology (PCP) is a theory of personality developed by the American psychologist George Kelly in the 1950s. Personal construct psychology | Psychology Wiki | Fandom Personal construct theory (PCT) or personal construct psychology (PCP) is a theory of personality and cognition developed by the American psychologist George Kelly in the 1950s. The theory is concerned with the psychological reasons for actions. Kelly proposed that individuals can be psychologically evaluated according to similarity-dissimilarity poles, which he called personal constructs (schemas, or ways of seeing the world). Personal construct theory - Wikipedia According to psychologist George Kelly, personality is composed of the various mental constructs through which each person views reality. Kelly believed that each person was much like a scientist. Just like scientists, we want to understand the world around us, make predictions about what will happen next, and create theories to explain events. Overview of Personal Construct Theory He published two texts called The Psychology of Personal Constructs, Volumes I and II which summarized the majority of his theory. Kelly's personal construct theory suggested that the differences between people result from the different ways that we predict and interpret events in the world around us. George Kelly and Personal Construct Theory Personal construct psychology, or PCP, has a lot to offer researchers and clinicians alike. It invites them to understand people's personal meanings by measuring their constructs. Instead of using... Want to Learn about Personal Construct Psychology ... Like other theories, the psychology of personal constructs is the implementation of a philosophical assumption. In this case the assumption is that whatever nature may be, or howsoever the quest for truth will turn out in the end, the events we face today are subject to as great a variety of construction as our wits will enable us to contrive. SECTION I The Psychology of Personal Constructs and its ... Personal Construct Theory (PCT) is a psychological theory of human cognition. Eddington said, "Science is the attempt to set in order the facts of experience." George Kelly, the psychologist and creator of personal construct theory pushed this

Inquiring Man: The Psychology of Personal Constructs ... According to personal construct psychology, developed by the American psychologist and personality theorist George Alexander Kelly(1905-1967), individuals create personal constructs to organize ongoing experience and anticipate future events. A personal construct is a bipolar mental template, consisting of something and its perceived opposite. Personal Constructs | Encyclopedia.com The Psychology of Personal Constructs George Kelly (1905-1967) Kelly, George A. (1905-1967), American psychologist. Kelly developed a theory of personality known as personal construct psychology, whose focus is on the distinctive ways in which individuals construct and reconstruct the meanings of their lives. About George Kelly Simply put, Kelly's personal construct theory represents the culmination of the shift from animalistic behaviorism to humanistic cognition. In American psychology, behaviorism was a powerful force, and began with the very traditional approach of theorists such as John B. Watson and B. F. Skinner.
